

The body arrives before interpretation.

The body arrives before interpretation. still be active. A face can be interrupted and still hold attention. A hand can become the first sign of agency before the viewer has named the person. The issue treats the body as origin, not because origin is simple, but because every later system of looking must first meet the fact of the body. Agency is close, image-led, and slightly uncomfortable. Faces and fragments interrupt the viewer before the viewer has decided what kind of image this is. A direct stare can feel like contact. A hidden

A close face turns presence into the first argument.

Presence is the first argument.

The veil edits attention. The veil is an editing system, not a disappearance. The third movement begins where the body and the rule meet a surface that can interrupt both. Lace, shadow, fabric, blur, flowers, hair, hands, and darkness all become interfaces. They do not simply hide the figure. They decide how slowly the figure can arrive. The veiling route is held through iconography, Vera Icona, lace, secrecy, and the larger problem of mediated access. The key point is not that the

