

Adornment and barrier share the work of constraint.

Visibility becomes a social rule.

The veil edits attention. The veil is an editing system, not a disappearance. The third movement begins where the body and the rule meet a surface that can interrupt both. Lace, shadow, fabric, blur, flowers, hair, hands, and darkness all become interfaces. They do not simply hide the figure. They decide how slowly the figure can arrive. The veiling route is held through iconography, Vera Icona, lace, secrecy, and the larger problem of mediated access. The key point is not that the

A face can look outward through inherited expectations.

Constraint

Visibility becomes a social rule. not erase agency. It redirects it. The body still carries force, but that force is shaped by context: who is permitted to look, who is expected to be seen, and what a culture teaches the viewer to accept as natural. This section feels less wild than the first, but more tense. The reader should sense that the body has entered a room where every gesture is already being measured. This matters to the theory of sight because the viewer is also constrained. We do not only look at