

Portraiture carries inherited pressure.

The gaze learns what culture permits. the viewer to accept as natural. This section feels less wild than the first, but more tense. The reader should sense that the body has entered a room where every gesture is already being measured. This matters to the theory of sight because the viewer is also constrained. We do not only look at the ruled body; we learn the rule by looking. Repetition, obstruction, pose, and symbol teach the eye how social meaning attaches to bodies through time. The eye

A role can frame the gaze before the viewer does.

A role can frame the face before the viewer does.

The veil edits attention. The veil is an editing system, not a disappearance. The third movement begins where the body and the rule meet a surface that can interrupt both. Lace, shadow, fabric, blur, flowers, hair, hands, and darkness all become interfaces. They do not simply hide the figure. They decide how slowly the figure can arrive. The veiling route is held through iconography, Vera Icona, lace, secrecy, and the larger problem of mediated access. The key point is not that the
