

A pose turns visibility into social information.

Visibility becomes a social rule.

A role can frame the face before the viewer does. The reader should sense that the body has entered a room where every gesture is already being measured. This matters to the theory of sight because the viewer is also constrained. We do not only look at the ruled body; we learn the rule by looking. Repetition, obstruction, pose, and symbol teach the eye how social meaning attaches to bodies through time. The eye becomes disciplined alongside the figure. Seeing is no longer just contact. It is compliance, resistance, and learned interpretation happening at the same time.

Costume and posture teach the viewer what to expect.

The gaze learns what culture permits.

The veil edits attention. The veil is an editing system, not a disappearance. The third movement begins where the body and the rule meet a surface that can interrupt both. Lace, shadow, fabric, blur, flowers, hair, hands, and darkness all become interfaces. They do not simply hide the figure. They decide how slowly the figure can arrive. The veiling route is held through iconography, Vera Icona, lace, secrecy, and the larger problem of mediated access. The key point is not that the
