Sight is behavior before it is style.

The image remembers every interruption. mediation keeps it unresolved. The image becomes powerful because no single force wins. This is the core thesis of the book: psychological pressure does not come from clear depiction alone. It comes from calculated revelation. The viewer feels the image because the image negotiates what can be seen, how quickly it can be seen, and what remains

Synthesis

Women through time become a visual archive. revelation. The viewer feels the image because the image negotiates what can be seen, how quickly it can be seen, and what remains withheld even after attention has been spent. The body is present, but not fully available. Culture is legible, but not neutral. The veil interrupts, but also teaches the eye how to continue. Psychology gives the gaze its behavioral force. Research on gaze cueing and social attention shows that eye direction affects an observer's attention and social interpretation, which is why a portrait can feel active
