

Sight remains unfinished.

Every act of looking leaves a remainder: memory, attention, and the human need to interpret what the eye cannot settle.